The authors are most grateful to Deni Bown, Manager of the IITA Forest Project, and John Peacock, former manager, for their recognition of the flagship nature of butterflies in demonstrating both the importance of biodiversity, and its beauty. Both Deni and John have also been excellent hosts in the course of our fieldwork. In addition Deni’s professional editing which has smoothed out the contrasts of two very diverse authors has been both appreciated and respected.

Peter Bruce-Jones, André Coetzer, Adrian Hoskins, Les Catchick, and David Arthur Dennis contributed many beautiful photos. Without them, this publication would be much less colorful, and less informative.

The authors would also like to acknowledge many years of knowledge freely and inspirationally shared by the present masters of African butterflies, most notably Steve C. Collins, Torben B. Larsen, and Michel Libert.

Finally, we offer IITA and the Leventis Foundation our best hopes for success in using the resources available to them in the cause of conserving the remaining jewels of Nigeria’s natural heritage.
